Built on the campus of St. Augustine’s College in 1896, St. Agnes Hospital served African Americans in Raleigh and the surrounding area until it closed in 1961. From 1914, St. Agnes was the only hospital in the area that served Black patients.

Through original interviews with the St. Agnes living legends this program tells the story of its impact on those who trained and worked there, and the truth about medical apartheid in North Carolina.
